

park sculpture

The Pratt Institute Sculpture Park is one of the largest sculpture parks in the greater New York area. It is a focal point for the Clinton Hill neighborhood and a visual primer for the Pratt student body. It is also an extraordinary way for residents of the city to experience a wide variety of works in suitable settings.

Pratt Sculpture Park

A Sculpture Park is like a symphony. Rather than single sculptures in their own environments, the works relate to each other visually and geographically. This orchestration takes place on the twenty-five acres of the Pratt Institute campus.

At one time public streets crossed the location where the Pratt campus sits today. Now, however, it is one large enclave, tree-shaded and carpeted with acres of lawns, and rich with many architectural and exterior sites sympathetic to the placing of sculpture.

The works do not necessarily sit at ground level. Some nestle in hollows, some are suspended, and others seem to grow from walls or boulders. The choices are broad, from realism to abstraction, from the lyric to the brutal, from the quiet to the assertive. This is a revolving exhibition, the works changing every one or two years, thus avoiding the static monumentality that is often connected with sculpture.

Some works are commissioned, but the general collection depends on the generosity and cooperation of the artists involved. The artists often visit the campus to explore possible sites before lending their work. Established sculptors and emerging talents form the texture of the park, and certain areas are reserved for advanced sculpture students for shorter periods (these are often works inspired by the park activity). The overall effect is a rich panoply of styles and sensibilities.

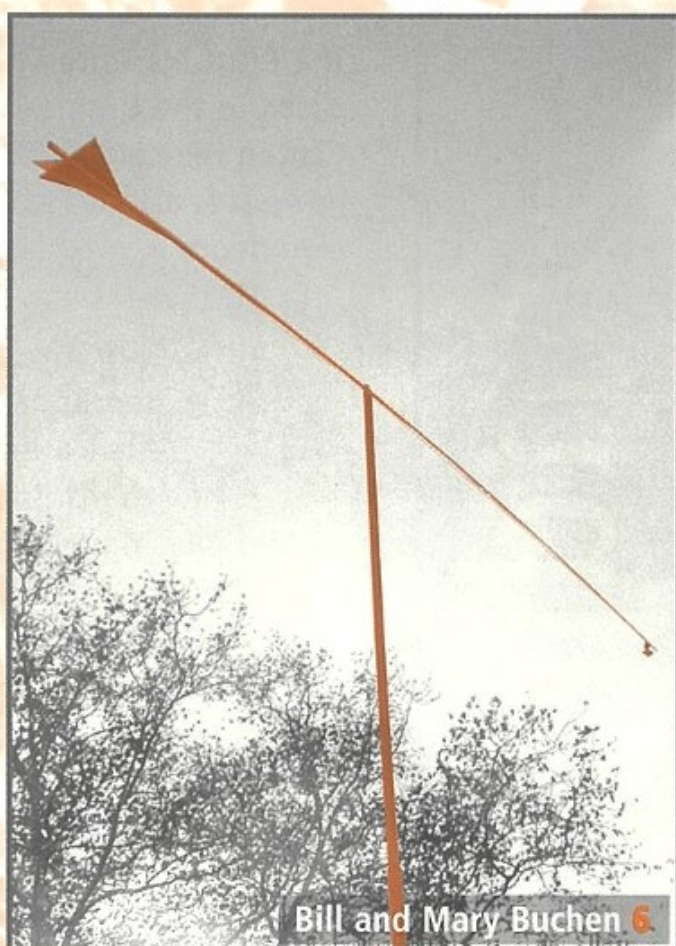

The Sculpture Park has the generous support of the Greenwall Foundation, the Lotos Foundation, Bayside Motion Group, and the Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation.
